They decide to listen to English for 2 hours every day. After a while, they have trouble finding time to practice. Finally, they lose motivation and give up. Because they quit too soon, their listening skills didn't improve. This is how many "motivated" English students fail. They practice hard in the beginning, but then they quit soon afterwards because they can't maintain that kind ...

A common approach with lists is to define an empty list, and then let your program add items to the list as necessary. This approach works, for example, when starting to build an interactive web site. Your list of users might start out empty, and then as people register for the site it will grow. This is a simplified approach to how web sites actually work, but the idea is realistic. Here is a ...
