Tracy L Johnston on August 11th, 2018 - 10:01am Hi Alfeus, Good question. I think the categorization is dependent on the wording of the question. I see it as the wording directing the answer, so when I see the question, I would consider the way a person taking the test might approach it, if they are following directions.

If you can answer your question with a quick search on the internet, then it's not a good research question. You want a topic that you can thoroughly examine in your paper while still leaving room for additional thought. It helps to choose a topic that's arguable, as these topics rarely have a right or wrong answer.
